Ralph G. Newman on “A Handful of Lincoln and Civil War Authors”

by Barbara Hughett

Over the years, the membership of The Civil War Round Table has enjoyed a rare privilege. In the fifty-four years of its existence, Round Table members have had the pleasure of listening to some of the greatest writers in the areas of Lincoln and Civil War scholarship. Unfortunately, since some of these great writers and speakers are no longer alive, many current members have been deprived of the joy of listening to such luminaries as Douglas Southall Freeman, Alan Novies, Bruce Catton, Avery Craven, Carl Sandburg, and many others.

Our founder, Ralph G. Newman, was of course present at that first meeting on December 3, 1940, and has heard them all—at least once. He will share his recollections about some of these colorful personalities on February 17, when he addresses The Round Table on the topic of “A Handful of Lincoln and Civil War Authors.”

From his memory of more than five hundred Round Table meetings, he has selected a group of these gifted individuals who have helped bring the events of 1861-1865 to life. He will recall some of the brilliant, often amusing, always informative, hours that he and his Round Table colleagues spent with these great historians. Ralph Newman will try to tell us how they sounded and what they said, and how he and his fellow Round Tablers laughed, wept, and learned from their words of wisdom and founts of wit.

Ralph Newman has contributed much to the world of Lincoln and Civil War scholarship and has been involved in many civic and educational activities and associations. There is simply not enough space here to include more than a few of his accomplishments, affiliations, and honors. A bookseller, rare manuscripts dealer, and appraiser, Newman has been specializing in Lincoln and Civil War books longer than anyone else. He opened his first book shop in downtown Chicago in 1933. He founded, and for many years owned, the Abraham Lincoln Book Shop; and he opened Newman Rare Books, in Chicago’s Fine Arts Building, last year.

With fifteen of his customers, Ralph Newman started the first Civil War Round Table in 1940. Now there are over 200 American Civil War Round Tables in this country and around the world.

He served for fourteen years as president of the board of directors of the Chicago Public Library. He has been honored as a laureate of the Lincoln Academy of Illinois and serves on its board of regents. Newman has been an officer and director of many organizations and institutions, including:

BATTLEFIELD PRESERVATION
☆ UPDATE ☆

by David Richert

The Illinois Memorial Temple at Vicksburg, Mississippi, is undergoing restoration, and additional monies are needed. Illinois had more units and soldiers engaged in Vicksburg operations than any other state—a fact acknowledged by our legislature's appropriation of nearly $200,000 during the first decade of this century to raise the imposing, Parthenon-like structure on the grounds of Vicksburg National Military Park. Our friend Terry Winschel, park historian at Vicksburg, has asked the Civil War Round Tables of Illinois to contribute to completion of the restoration, and Superintendent William Nicholas has pledged to match the funds we raise. Those who wish to donate to the project should make their check payable to The Civil War Round Table of Chicago, with "Illinois Monument at Vicksburg" noted on the memo line. To remit the donation or to receive further information, please contact Mary Abrose, 212 Woodbine Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois 60091-3332; 708-251-4745.

Historian A. Wilson Greene, a founder and president and CEO of the Association for the Preservation of Civil War Sites since January 1990, has left his position to become executive director of the Pamplin Park Civil War Site, south of Petersburg. He will continue his association with APCWS as a trustee. Under Will's leadership, APCWS, founded in 1987, grew to an organization of 8800 members that raised $1.8 million for preservation in 1994. Dennis Frye, historian at Harpers Ferry National Historical Park, was named interim president while a formal search for a replacement for Will is conducted. Our congratulations and thanks to Will for a job well done, and our best wishes for success in his new endeavor.

A $47,000 cooperative agreement, awarded by the American Battlefield Protection Program to the Georgia State Office of Historic Preservation, will help preserve the Resaca Battlefield, located thirty-three miles south of Chattanooga. It was the scene of fierce fighting on May 14 and 15, 1864, during the Atlanta Campaign. According to O.J. Keller, a Georgia Civil War Commission member, "The construction of Interstate 75 did destroy some of the Confederate earthworks at Resaca, but the view from the highway toward the west reveals that the Union lines have changed very little in the intervening 130 years. Part of the Confederate forts to the north and east also remain, including the famous four-gun battery, which federal troops captured during severe fighting on May 14." The preservation plan will be completed in April.

The owners of a farm along Fox Gap Road, west of Middletown, Maryland, will receive $321,000 in exchange for placing a conservation easement on their 109-acre farm, which lies on the South Mountain Battlefield. The property, the site of intense fighting during the Battle of South Mountain in September 1862, will now be protected from future development. The easement acquisition brings to $1.2 million the state's investment since last year in preserving the battlefield. Last fall it paid $118,000 for the White House Inn adjacent to the 109-acre farm, and last spring paid $140,000 and $640,000 for two other farms. The state hopes to acquire another half-dozen easements from South Mountain property owners.
At the 537th regular meeting on January 13, 157 members and guests of The Civil War Round Table were treated to an address by James I. (Bud) Robertson Jr., who gave an engaging speech on “New Viewpoints on Stonewall Jackson.” Robertson is currently working on an in-depth biography of Jackson. He spent three years doing research before starting to write, because he wanted to test accepted perceptions about Jackson’s life.

Although Thomas Jonathan Jackson was perhaps the most popular field commander in the world after the Shenandoah Valley campaign in 1862, Robertson stated that his presentation was more about Jackson the man than about his military exploits. “The first impressions of Stonewall Jackson are not usually correct,” Robertson explained. For example, he was called “Old Jack,” not “Stonewall” by his men. As another example, only one reliable source supported the idea that Jackson liked lemons. However, he did enjoy many fruits, especially peaches. Also, according to Robertson, “Jackson was an astute businessman, certainly not the country bumpkin that one may imagine.” He overcame a great deal of adversity, and he was a self-made man with great determination.

Robertson pointed out that Jackson has been portrayed as an eccentric personality, but “the ‘character’ idea has been grossly overblown,” he asserted. However, Jackson did have unusual mannerisms, such as throwing his right arm into the air “to balance his body’s flow of blood.” He did not eat what he liked to eat and never used seasonings. Jackson was virtually humorless, never knowing how to interpret the punchline of a joke.

Jackson’s personal life might explain some of his unique characteristics, Robertson explained. Tragedy and the deaths of family members plagued Jackson from his birth. He was painfully shy, introverted, and poverty-stricken, and suffered from maladies such as dyspepsia, poor vision, and partial deafness. To overcome these adversities, Robertson claimed that “Jackson’s unbelievable determination was one of his greatest traits.” He realized that the military life might be his only chance to excel. Although woefully unprepared for West Point, he rose from the bottom to rank seventeenth in a class of fifty-nine students. During his time at West Point, he received no demerits for poor behavior.

A major emphasis of Robertson’s speech was on “Stonewall” Jackson’s deep faith in God. “His Calvinist religious considerations colored his outlook on war; Jackson was fighting for God, not his men, and therefore he asked more of his men,” stated Robertson. Jackson demanded and received total discipline. “His men could march farther and longer than other soldiers because they were in superb shape,” said Robertson. Jackson had supreme confidence in his men, never thinking of defeat. In return, his soldiers were in absolute awe of Jackson.

As a tactician, “Stonewall” Jackson did the unpredictable. The flank attack became his specialty. After completing his fifth flanking maneuver of the war at the Battle of Chancellorsville, he was wounded in the left arm by “friendly fire” and died eight days later, on May 10, 1863, at Guinea Station, Virginia.

Robertson concluded that “Stonewall Jackson epitomized the good and virtue of the ‘Lost Cause.’” Death struck him at the high point of Confederate success. However, Robertson does not believe that the Confederacy would have won the Civil War—even if Stonewall Jackson had survived.

RALPH NEWMAN (continued from page 1) ing the Abraham Lincoln Association, the Ulysses S. Grant Association, the Stephen A. Douglas Association, and Lincoln College. He served as chairman of the Illinois Commission of the New York World’s Fair and the Illinois Sesquicentennial Commission.

His literary works include The American Iliad, Lincoln for the Ages, The Civil War Digest, and Abraham Lincoln’s Last Full Measure of Devotion. In a number of works, he collaborated with fellow Round Table members Otto Eisenreichl and E.B. (Pete) Long. For ten years, he wrote a column for the Chicago Tribune, and wrote a syndicated column, “Civil War Scrapbook,” during the Civil War Centennial years.

Newman served as secretary of The Round Table from 1940-45, making all the arrangements for speakers and meeting places. He was the tenth president (1954-55) of The Civil War Round Table. In 1975, The Round Table honored him with its Nevins-Freeman Award. This will be his tenth address to a regular meeting of the organization he founded; he also served as a member of a panel or assembly on several occasions.

Ralph Newman’s first ambition was to be a baseball player. He played minor league baseball for the Arizona State League and later for the Western Association. In 1931-32, he played for teams in Tucson and Wichita. His budding baseball career came to a halt when he was injured while trying to steal second base. Shortly thereafter, he went into the book business.

Mark E. Neely, Jr., once described Ralph Newman: “A man of irrepressible energy, with a fertile and inventive mind, Mr. Newman has headed, shaped, aided, rescued, or advised, dozens of important historical institutions and organizations.” Neely added that Newman “has been at the hub of the great wheel of Lincoln interest for five decades.”

President’s Note

The Executive Committee of The Civil War Round Table voted, at its meeting on January 29, to raise the price for dinner meetings, effective at the March 10 meeting. From that time on, our monthly dinners will cost $25 for Round Table members and $30 for non-members. This change is being made for budgetary reasons, and was prompted by the report of our Financial Planning Committee at the Executive Committee meeting. For the past couple of years, after all costs have been factored in, The Round Table has been losing over $4 on each dinner served. Thank you for your understanding in this matter.

“The Era of Sacrifice: The Fight for Freedom, 1856-1866”—a year-long exhibition—will open at the Wheaton History Center in DuPage County, Illinois, on February 12. A private showing will be given at 3:00 p.m., followed by a dinner at 5:00 p.m., featuring a performance of “An Evening with Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln” with Max and Donna Daniels. Tickets are $50 per person. For information, call Roger Bohn at 708-858-2956.

Round Table Secretary Bruce Allardice has written a feature article, which appears in the February issue of Civil War Times Illustrated. “Out of the Shadows” is about the Confederacy’s “least known” general, Robert C. Tyler. Allardice’s book, Other Generals in Gray, will be published by Louisiana State University Press this spring.
