NEVINS-FREEMAN ADDRESS
James M. McPherson on “Darling, You Should Not Have Done That: Married Soldiers in the Civil War”

by Barbara Hughett

THE NEVINS-FREEMAN AWARD, named in honor of distinguished historians Allan Nevins and Douglas Southall Freeman, was established by The Civil War Round Table of Chicago in 1974. It is presented to individuals to honor their outstanding contributions to the preservation of American history, especially that occurring between the years 1861-1865. On October 18, noted Civil War scholar James M. McPherson will become the twenty-third annual recipient of the Nevins-Freeman Award.

The title of his acceptance address will be “Darling, You Should Not Have Done That: Married Soldiers in the Civil War.” In this lecture, Dr. McPherson will explore the dilemma of competing male and female ideals of duty and honor in the America of the 1860s.

About 30 percent of volunteer soldiers in the American Civil War were married, and most of these men were fathers. An important motive for their enlistment was the masculine code of duty and honor as it was understood in the Victorian era. Many of their wives, however, believed that the principal duty of their husbands should be to family rather than country, and opposed their enlistment. Husbands responded by arguing that the failure to fulfill their duty to country would dishonor their families as well as themselves.

James M. McPherson was born in North Dakota and raised in Minnesota, where he graduated from Gustavus Adolphus College. He received his Ph.D. in history from The John Hopkins University. Since 1962 he has taught at Princeton University, where he currently holds the chair of George Henry Davis ’86 Professor of American History.

He is the author of ten books on the Civil War era, the most recent of which is Drawn With the Sword: Reflections on the American Civil War. His Battle Cry of Freedom: The Civil War Era won the Pulitzer Prize for History in 1989. McPherson is also a popular speaker on the lecture circuit and has appeared on many television and radio programs dealing with Civil War topics.

BATTLEFIELD PRESERVATION UPDATE

by Mary Munsell Abro

The Association for the Preservation of Civil War Sites (APCWS) finalized a deal recently to buy 1543 acres at Brandy Station from developer Lee Sammis, who at various times planned an office park and a racetrack in the heart of the battlefield. Accompanying that positive news is the challenge of a $6.2 million price tag, which constitutes the largest-ever battlefield acquisition by the private sector. About one-third to one-half of the purchase price will come from a separate APCWS agreement with a local agricultural consortium. The remainder must be provided by us, the American public, over the three-year life of the purchase contract. Most urgently needed is $1 million for a down payment to Sammis in mid-November. Fortunately, an anonymous foundation has offered a $500,000 challenge grant for that purpose, but it must be matched by November 1 or it will be forfeited.

As an organization, The Civil War Round Table will make as sizeable a donation to meet the challenge grant as our Battlefield Preservation Fund allows after the October meeting. In that regard, generous spending for the book raffle and on items for sale at the Schimmelfennig Boutique is recommended. In addition, Dr. James McPherson's latest work, Drawn with the Sword, will be sold at the October meeting in conjunction with his Nevins-Freeman appearance; a portion of the proceeds will benefit our Battlefield Preservation Fund. Of course, personal contributions are also encouraged. Send your check, payable to APCWS Brandy Station Campaign, to APCWS, 11 Public Square, Suite 200, Hagerstown, Maryland 21740.

SEPTMBER MEETING
by Larry Gibbs
On September 20, at the 553rd regular meeting of the Civil War Round Table, 93 members and guests heard Dr. Stephen R. Wise speak on "Gate of Hell: The 1863 Charleston Campaign." Wise, the director of the Parris Island Marine Corps Museum, has appeared on "Civil War Journal" and has written two books on the Civil War, including Gate of Hell: The Campaign for Charleston Harbor, 1863 (1994), on which his interesting and informative presentation was based.

In the summer of 1863 Charleston, South Carolina, was a very important city for both the Confederacy and the Union. Charleston, "the birthplace of secession" and the third largest city in the South, was an important symbol. A thriving seaport in peace time, Charleston was also important to the Confederacy for blockade running and as an arsenal. Wise proclaimed, "the Confederacy badly needed to hold Charleston in mid-1863. With the naval victories at Gettysburg and Vicksburg, the battle for Charleston Harbor took on more importance for the Confederate cause. A third major defeat would be disastrous."

The first shots of the Civil War were at Fort Sumter on April 12, 1861, located 3.3 miles east of Charleston. The fort was a large sea port and a major Federal target in the summer of 1863. The Rebels protected the island with two prominent fortifications, Battery Gregg and Fort Wagner at the northern tip.

An initial naval attack on April 7, 1863, failed to conquer Charleston. On July 10 Union Rear Admiral John Dahlgren and Brigadier General Quincy Gillmore launched a combined attack on Fort Wagner. This operation failed miserably with heavy losses. Another combined Army and Navy attack was attempted on July 18. The Union approach to the fort was over a narrow stretch of sand that was 25 yards wide. A marsh was on the west and the Atlantic Ocean was on the east side. Wise stressed that "Fort Wagner was a very formidable fortification." Among the 11,000 Union troops was the 54th Massachusetts Infantry Regiment, a black unit made famous in the movie, "Glory." After ironclad guns bombarded the fort for eleven hours, the 54th Massachusetts led the infantry charge at dusk. The 54th suffered a forty percent casualty rate. It and five other regiments were repulsed, but the black soldiers proved they were reliable fighters.

After these attempts to take Ft. Wagner failed, Gillmore began to show his frustration. A large Parrot cannon, nicknamed the "Swamp Angel," fired 36 rounds of 300-pound shells into Charleston. "The Swamp Angel exploded on the 36th round and had very little effect," explained Wise. Further evidence of growing Yankee frustration was the lack of communication between Dahlgren and Gillmore.

The Union bombardment of Ft. Wagner became extremely heavy on September 4, and the Rebels abandoned Wagner during the night of September 6. Wise claimed, however, that "the Southerners had much to be proud of in their efforts to protect Ft. Sumter and Charleston."

From Morris Island, the Union artillery eventually pulverized Ft. Sumter. Despite the Union conquests of Forts Wagner and Sumter, Charleston continued to hold out until February, 1865, when General Sherman's troops marched through South Carolina. At last the Federals took Charleston, but not without a tremendous struggle.

1989, when he spoke on "Lincoln and Liberty." He was the featured speaker at the Fiftieth Anniversary banquet in October 1989, when his topic was "The Two Cultures and the Civil War." That essay is published in The Continuing Civil War: Essays in Honor of The Civil War Round Table of Chicago, the book containing the addresses delivered during the Fiftieth Anniversary Symposium Weekend. It is currently on sale during all our monthly meetings, at the Schmelltenning Boutique, with profits going to the cause of battlefield preservation.
