Greene of Pamplin Park calls “the finest study of the Petersburg Campaign in more than a century”.

Early J. Hess grew up in rural Missouri. He completed his B.A. and M.A. degrees in History at Southeast Missouri State University, with a Ph.D. from Purdue University. He has taught at a number of institutions, including the University of Georgia, Texas Tech University, and the University of Arkansas. Since 1989, he has been an assistant and associate professor at Lincoln Memorial University, in Harrogate, Tennessee, where he also is director of the History Program and holds the Stewart W. McCelland Chair in History. Dr. Hess has published twelve books, thirty-three articles, and more than 100 book reviews. Among his publications is In the Trenches at Petersburg: Field Fortifications and Confederate Defeat (U. of N.C. Press, 2009). Dr. Hess has also co-authored, with his wife Dr. Pratibha Dabholkar, Sinjin in the Rain: The Making of an American Masterpiece. He was nominated for the Pulitzer Prize in 2002.
Two Owners Donate Easements On 782 Brandy Station Battlefield Acres. by Scott C. Boyd, Brandy Station, VA — Two conservation easements donated to the state have added a total of 782 acres of preserved land to the Brandy Station Battlefield in Culpeper County.

“What this means is that, in return for some of the landowners’ closing costs—the value of their property, these landowners have forsaken all future development rights to this land—meaning, it will be protected just the way it is forever,” Civil War Preservation Trust (CWPT) President Jim Lighthizer said in a July 30 appeal letter. He wrote, “As part of the deal, and to help make sure these transactions went through, the Civil War Preservation Trust was asked to pay $85.68 per acre cost to some of the landowners’ closing and to help make sure these transactions went through.”

The easements were announced the CWPT had preserved slightly over 1,000 acres earlier this year. Now the total is 1,797 acres, according to CWPT Policy and Communications Director Jim Campi. “In both these easements, we’re talking about highly significant battlefield property,” according to Clark B. “Bud” Hall, president of the non-profit Brandy Station Foundation and historian of the battle. “We’re thrilled about it,” Hall said. “All congratulations are due to the CWPT, because without their money, which comes from their donors, we couldn’t close the deal.”

CWPT has been extraordinarily willing to work to secure easements around America’s greatest cavalry battlefield.” Hall noted. “It’s a fact that the Brandy Station battlefield remains threatened because of the pressures of adjacent residential and commercial development,” he said. Negotiations, which he could not yet discuss publicly, are under way to secure additional “significant acreage” on and around the battlefield. Lighthizer’s letter said the easement donors wished to remain anonymous, however local newspapers identified the Gyory family as the donors of 433 acres of Willow Run Farm on the eastern portion of the battlefield.

The second easement was for 349 acres of the Beauregard Farm tract, Hall said, “I can’t imagine a more important easement on the entire battlefield.” Of the Beauregard Farm tract, Hall said, “I can’t imagine a more important easement on the entire battlefield.”

Confederate Brigadier General W.H.F. “Rooney” Lee’s entire defensive position during the morning of 6 June is on the Beauregard Farm. “You could not more precisely draw an easement that would more accurately incorporate an entire line of troops,” according to Hall. “Importantly, the CWPT already owns the Federal attack platform on the Cunningham Farm and this is contiguous with the Beauregard Farm.” He said, “The dividing line between the properties is a stone wall which Rooney Lee’s brigade held during that morning. West of the stone wall are the Confederates and east of the stone wall are the Federals. “How many battlefields can you say that you got the entire morning phase of the battle protected in one case by acquisition, CWPT land, and in the next case by this incredibly valuable easement? I’m thrilled to have it,” Hall said.

“What you’ve got is, in concert, a saved piece of battlefield that was purchased by acquisition now complemented in a major, major way by this easement.”

Lighthizer mentioned the potential fate the Beauregard Farm faced before the easement: “Three million square feet of retail stores, a 2,500 seat multiplex movie theater, 16 restaurants, 30 apartments, a water park, three high banks, three gas stations, a lighted 18-hole golf course, an equestrian center, an ice skating rink and even a private K-12 school.” Hall was also extremely pleased with the 433-acre Willow Run Farm easement. “This property gives us a wonderful piece of land that was marched over, camped upon and fought over as Confederate and Union cavalry forces vied with each other for control of the Brandy plain,” he said. “Now you have Confederate Major General JEB Stuart’s viewscape from Willow Run Farm all the way to the Rappahan- nock River,” he pointed out. “This was ground where Federal cavalry officers would deploy their troops for attacks against Fleerwood Hill.”

“When preservation groups work together, terrific things happen. The BF is privileged to be a partner with CWPT,” Hall said. “Further information go to www.civilwar.org/battlefields/brandystation.html and www.brandystationfoundation.com.”

From the September “Civil War News” September Meeting

By Jackie Wilson

A native son, Dr. Wayne Mahood returned to the Chicago area to present his talk on Brigadier General James S. Wadsworth at the 69th annual meeting of The Chicago Civil War Round Table.

The General, born 1807, liked excitement and was very impetuoius and was eventually kicked out of Harvard for not going to classes. Wadsworth was a war hero and a hero of the Civil War.

The General had a great personality and was loved by the troops. He was shot in the forehead. The General died two days later without ever regaining consciousness.

Mahood opines that his contemporary considered him as a curiosity, and was not sure how lucid he really was. A monument was raised to him in 1914 at Gettysburg where the Iron Brigade. He played a large leadership role at Gettysburg, celebrated in the heavy fighting on the first day when corps commander John Reynolds was killed.

Eventually Wadsworth got his own army command, and it was a well-known unit: the 1st Division of the 1st Corps, which included the Iron Brigade. He played a large leadership role at Gettysburg, especially in the heavy fighting on the first day when corps command- mander John Reynolds was killed.

Wadsworth’s men loved him as he made sure that they were always taken care of and usually out of his own pocket. Nobody could understand why the millionaire would want to be in the front lines at his age. Perhaps the same problem that kept him from his father’s good graces when a youth: he was what we now call today, an adrenaline junkie.

After Gettysburg, General Meade was moving too slow for him, so slow, that Wadsworth re- signed. Lincoln sent him to the military camps in Mississippi.

When Grant takes over the entire army in 1864, Wadsworth then came back to Virginia to com- mand a division in the 5th Corps under General Gouverneur K. Warren. At the battle of the Wild- nerness, May 6, 1864, as he got ready to lead a charge, his horse went wild and as he bent down, he was shot in the forehead. Captured by the enemy, Wadsworth died two days later without ever regaining consciousness.

The University of North Carolina Press, one of the nation’s finest historical publishers, has an- nounced the March 2011 launch of a new publication, “The Jewel of the Civil War Era.” The new journal will focus on the many issues raised by the section of military history, Civil War, Reconstruction, and the memory of the conflict. He wrote, “As part of the deal, and to help make sure these transactions went through, the Civil War Preservation Trust was asked to pay some of the landowners’ closing costs—a total of about $60,000.” He called the $85.69 per acre paid to CWPT “one of the better and more innovative bargains we have ever struck.”

Until the easements were announced the CWPT had preserved slightly over 1,000 acres across Virginia.

The total is 1,797 acres, according to CWPT Policy and Communications Director Jim Campi. “In both these easements, we’re talking about highly significant battlefield property,” according to Clark B. “Bud” Hall, president of the non-profit Brandy Station Foundation and author of history of the battle. “We’re thrilled about it,” Hall said. “All congratulations are due to the CWPT, because without their money, which comes from their donors, we couldn’t close the deal.”

A native son, Dr. Wayne Mahood returned to the Chicago area to present his talk on Brigadier General James S. Wadsworth at the 69th Annual Meeting of The Chicago Civil War Round Table. The General, born 1807, liked excitement and was very impetu-ous and was eventually kicked out of Harvard for not going to classes. He was a dandy. His father feared he would never settle down. He loved to be outdoors and have adventures. He built his own home when he was 28. He married a Philadelphia beauty and had six children with her, although many wondered when he had time. He also inherited a very large estate from his father and uncle as the sole surviving heir and it included 300,000 acres in both New York and Ohio.

At age 43, he returned from Scotland with a totally white head of hair, thanks to a horrible experience with a storm in the mid-Atlantic. The trip took a total of 63 days from start to finish, having to turn around and go to Ireland after almost reaching Nova Scotia.

He attended the 1861 Peace Conference where he became an abolitionist. When the war broke out, he was a 53 year old million- aire and he became an unpaid aid to General McClellan. He also was the Military Governor of Washington DC. As such, he was responsible for all the troops coming and going at the military camps in Mississippi. When Grant takes over the entire army in 1864, Wadsworth then came back to Virginia to command a division in the 5th Corps under General Gouverneur K. Warren. At the battle of the Wilder-ness, May 6, 1864, as he got ready to lead a charge, his horse wild and as he bent down, he was shot in the forehead. Mahood opines that his con-temporaries considered him as a curiosity, and was not sure how lucid he really was. A monument was raised to him in 1914 at Gettysburg and there have been four forts named in his honor in Pe-tenburg, VA; Staten Island, NY; Pierre, SD; and SC. Professor Mahood ended his talk by relating the career paths of the General’s descendants.

Earl Hess on "Soldier Life in the Trenches at Petersburg"

The trenches were almost knee deep in mud and it was still raining. Our clothes were covered with mud and soaked with rain, no place to sleep and nothing much to eat, and sixty-four pound mortars shelling all around...—W. A. Day, 49th North Carolina

The Petersburgh campaign began 15 June 1864 with Union attempts to break an improvised line of Confederate fortifications. By the time the campaign ended on 2 April 1865, two opposing lines of sophisticated and complex earthworks stretched for thirty-five miles, covering not only Petersburg but also the south-eastern approaches to Richmond.

Professor Hess’s presentation will examine the Petersburg works within the context of strategic and tactical operations in Virginia during the last ten months of the Civil War, when field fortifications dominated military planning and the landscape of battle. The presentation will humanize the experience of the soldiers working in the fortifications, revealing their attitudes toward attacking and defending earthworks and the human cost of trench warfare in the waning days of the Civil War. The presentation is based on Hess’s latest book, In the Trenches at Petersburg, which will be published by the University of North Carolina Press in 2011.

The Civil War Round Table of Chicago is proud to announce the unveiling of a huge new repository of the senator’s papers.
